JUNE 2005

SPARKS' PERSPECTIVE

Ron Sparks
Commissioner

Agri-terrorism has become a common term across America since September 11, 2001, when farmers and farm suppliers were put on alert to watch for suspicious activities in their respective areas. We want to believe that an act of terrorism can not and will not originate from a community here in Alabama. The reality is that not only must we do everything we can to ensure the safety of our food supply, but we must protect against terrorists using agricultural products that can be toxic or explosive and from possibly spreading disease in livestock or plants that can cripple our economy.

Something that may seem ordinary to those in the farming business may be used as a weapon by terrorists. For example, most farmers are very familiar with ammonium nitrate, which is commonly used in fertilizer. Some people may not realize that while being developed as a fertilizer, ammonium nitrate was also studied by scientists who were attempting to make an explosive compound. In 1995, a truckload of this type of fertilizer was used to cause the explosion at the federal building in Oklahoma City.

Recently, a news station in Birmingham attempted to see how easily a person could purchase large quantities of ammonium nitrate fertilizer. They were able to purchase about 1,000 pounds from different dealers without providing photo identification. Timothy McVeigh used approximately 4,000 pounds in Oklahoma City, but a smaller amount can still cause a tremendous amount of destruction. Although ammonium nitrate is listed as an explosive material by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, keeping records of who purchases the fertilizer is still voluntary, not mandatory.

This month, I will be attending an agricultural security conference dedicated to understanding agri-terrorism threats and preventive measures. The Department of Agriculture and Industries will be working with the Department of Public Health, Department of Homeland Security, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, UAB, and the Governor's Office to provide not only an overview of agricultural vulnerabilities, but prevention of terrorist acts and recovery from them if they do occur. This conference will include veterinarians, nurses and doctors, first responders, law enforcement and food production professionals. It is important that we all take time to learn more about how to protect our families.

I strongly encourage those of you who work in the farming industry to take steps to protect your business, your family, and communities from agri-terrorism. Be cautious, ask questions, and learn more about how to prevent such a tragedy. At the Department of Agriculture and Industries, we have begun to train our employees at the

Pesticide Division Receives National Award

Commissioner Ron Sparks and the Alabama Department of Agriculture & Industries received a national award from the Ag Container Recycling Council (ACRC). In 2004, Alabama's Pesticide Management Division had a 355% increase in productivity for pesticide container recycling, which was the highest improvement in the nation. Sam Gibson, President and CEO of USAG Recycling, and Don Bradley, Vice Chairman, and Kent Kutnink, Chairman of the Agricultural Container Research Council presented the award to the Department.

Commissioner Ron Sparks also presented awards to winners of the Department of Agriculture and Industries' first Pesticide Container Recycling Awards. Three pesticide container participants, Homer Tate (Tate Farms) of Meridianville, Bruce Chisenhall (Chisenhall Agricultural Services, Incorporated) of Magnolia Springs, and Reba Walker (UAP Timberland) of Auburn, received awards for their efforts to promote environmental stewardship. "These are a few of the people that have helped the Department of Agriculture surpass our goals for pesticide container recycling," stated Sparks. "We take environmental concerns very seriously in Alabama and it is an honor to be given this award. We wanted to give thanks to those who have helped us in our efforts. I also want to thank our Pesticide Management Division staff at the Department. Without their commitment and hard work, we could not have done such an amazing job."

This year's state award recipients have participated in the pesticide container recycling program for over ten years. They act as good stewards for the environment by protecting our

Damaging Oak Disease May be Present in Some Alabama Landscapes

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and state and national forestry officials are concerned that the damaging disease, Ramorum blight or Sudden Oak Death, may have been introduced into some Alabama landscapes. Officials say it is possible homeowners may have purchased some common landscape plants in the last few years that may have been infected with the fungus-like pathogen, Phytophthora ramorum, that causes the disease. Ramorum blight was first seen in the 1990s in oak trees in California and Europe.

In 2004, the disease was discovered in four nurseries in California and Oregon. All diseased plants at these nurseries were destroyed, and all diseased plants that had been shipped to nurseries or retail stores in other states were located and destroyed.

In Alabama, the disease was identified in only two nurseries and one garden shop. These plants were destroyed by officials with the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries. In all, 22 states found some diseased plants in nurseries or retail garden stores, and, again, all of these plants were destroyed. "We have been fortunate, so far, that it has not become established in the environment," said Commissioner Ron Sparks. "It is important to be sure that we find any infected plants and destroy them to protect our healthy foliage."

Dr. Jackie Mullen, a plant pathologist with the Alabama Cooperative Extension System, says there is concern that some Phytophthora ramorum-infected plants may have been sold before officials were able to visit all the nurseries and garden centers and issue temporary stop sale orders while testing was being done.

Alabama officials do not expect to discover significant occurrence of the disease, because only three positive samples were identified out of 289 samples tested in 2004.

Dr. Austin Hagan, an Extension plant pathologist, says

camellias, rhododendrons, pieris, viburnums, mountain laurels and lilacs are some of the common landscape plants that could become infected with this oak disease. These are the common plants that were shipped to Alabama nurseries and garden shops last year from California and Oregon, and symptoms could appear on these plants this spring.

"Other Southeastern plants that may be infected include azaleas, pyracanthas, witch hazels, strawberry trees, poison oaks, honeysuckles, and huckleberries," said Hagan. "We do not expect to find SOD present in the Southeast on trees at the present time, but trees that are susceptible in this area include the southern red oak and northern red oak."

Dr. Jim Jacobi, an Extension plant pathologist housed at the Birmingham Botanical Gardens, points out that while the disease has not been found in any landscape settings in Alabama, scientists are establishing a testing program.

"Because of the disease's severe effects on oak trees, the USDA, the U.S. Forest Service, the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries and the Alabama Cooperative Extension System are cooperating to provide a testing program for homeowners if plant damage indicates they may have sudden oak death disease," said Jacobi. "Several diseases and problems may cause the same type of damage on camellias, rhododendrons and other landscape plants so testing is needed to determine if SOD is present."

Jacobi and Mullen encourage homeowners, if they have purchased camellias, rhododendrons, azaleas, viburnums, pieris, mountain laurels or lilacs in the past three years, to check these plants this spring for evidence of leaf spot, dieback, leaf edge browning, or leaf drop.

"If you see any of this type damage, you should call your County Extension office for more information to help you determine if your plants should be tested," said Mullen. "We do not expect that oak trees have become infected this spring, but if damaged areas are present on oak trunks, contact your County Extension office for more information. If evidence indicates that the damage may be caused by the Sudden Oak Death fungus, Extension professionals will take your name, address and phone number."

Residents of Baldwin, Butler, Clarke, Conecuh, Escambia, Mobile, Monroe and Washington counties should contact the Extension Horticulture Information line at 866/855-1909.

Residents of Blount, Calhoun, Cherokee, Cleburne, Cullman, Dekalb, Etowah, Jackson, Marshall and St. Clair Counties should call Extension's regional Master Gardener horticulture information line at 888/574-2451.

Mullen explains that the information will be passed on to officials with the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries. Both Mullen and Jacobi caution homeowners not to disturb the suspect plant and not to take plant samples to the county Extension office.

"Since this disease is under federal and state quarantine, official samples must be collected by inspectors with the State Department of Agriculture and Industries," said Mullen. "By having trained inspectors take the samples, we reduce the possibility of spreading the disease."

If the sample tests positive for Phytophthora ramorum, the USDA lab will send the results to state officials with the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service and the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries, who will contact the homeowner.

Destruction of diseased plants will be necessary to prevent spread of the disease and infection of oak trees. Plants that test negative for Phytophthora ramorum will not be disturbed. State Department of Agriculture and Industries officials will notify homeowners of both positive and negative test results.

Dr. Walter Hill Receives Academy of Honor Award

Farm Credit Bank of Texas selected Dr. Walter A. Hill, dean of Tuskegee University's College of Agricultural, Environmental and Natural Sciences, to receive the Academy of Honor award for 2005, recognizing his outstanding service and contribution to agriculture. Hill is the first African American recipient and the first from an academic institution to be selected. He received the award at the Bank's annual shareholders' meeting March 31.

Hill also enjoyed two other awards recently: the "Diversity Award" from the 2004 Council on Chemical Research thanks to a nomination by colleagues at Pioneer Hi-Bred and DuPont, and the "Irving Award for Outstanding Leadership" from the American Distance Education Consortium.

"To God goes all the honor and thanks and praise for so many blessings," an elated Hill said regarding the awards. "I also thank my family, friends and colleagues for their outstanding support and wonderful spirit of cooperation."

Farm Credit Bank CEO Larry Doyle of Austin, Texas, presented a check for $10,000 in scholarship funds to be given in Hill's name to deserving students through the George Washington Carver Endowment Fund. The presentation was made during the George Washington Carver Society's celebration of 10 years of service on April 1 in the Kellogg Conference Center.

Since 1996, Hill has been dean of Tuskegee University's College of Agricultural, Environmental and Natural Sciences. His Ph.D. in agronomy/environmental chemistry is from the University of Illinois, and he has an Master of Science degree in soil chemistry from the University of Arizona, and an M.A.T. in chemistry from the University of Chicago. Hill earned his Bachelor of Arts degree in chemistry from Lake Forest College.

He provides leadership in research and education programs in agricultural and environmental sciences, biology, chemistry, food and nutritional sciences, forestry and natural resource sciences, and rural development. He serves as director, George Washington Carver Agricultural Experiment Station, research director of the USDA Cooperative State Research Program and professor within the Department of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences.

The Farm Credit Bank of Texas is the source of funds and financial services for 22 customer-owned lending cooperatives in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico and Texas. The bank and its affiliated associations comprise the Tenth Farm Credit District, the largest rural lending network in the five-state region.

Alabama Products Make Top Treats List

Three Alabama companies had their products chosen out of over 200 from around the country as being the Top Ten Best at the Fancy Food Show in Chicago held last month. Below are some of the comments made about Wickles Pickles, Gems Hard Candy Treats, and Mook Mills Cheese Straws.

Wickles Pickles (Sims Foods Inc., Dadeville, Alabama, www.simsfoods.com/home.php) Wow! My mouth is dancing with excitement. These pickles are like nothing I've ever experienced. The crisp sweet flavor gives way to a wonderful low heat that would excite any sandwich or recipe.

Gems Hard Candy Treats (Mama Helen's Gourmet Treats, Florence, Alabama, 256/381-2571). State shapes! Why didn't I think of that? This is a great idea for gifts.

The taste is great. A small Alabama shaped hard candy with an over the top flavor. It puts many commercial candies to shame.

Mook's Cheese Straws (Mook Mills, Florence, AL, www.mookscheesestraws.com). These are like your grandmothers cheese straws but so much better. Grandma would be jealous of the wonderful cheese flavor that these guys have. I've had many store bought and home made cheese straws, but these are by far the best I've ever had. A full cheese flavor that entices and a spice that builds.

For assistance in promoting your Alabama made product, contact the Department of Agriculture and Industries at 334/240-7100.

groundwater and not disposing of their empty pesticide containers in landfills. Kent Kutnink said, "The industry at large is focused on being good stewards and Alabama has done an excellent job." Don Bradley added, "The success of the recycling efforts in Alabama happened because of teamwork by the Department of Agriculture, growers, commercial applicators, the crop protection industry all working together."

The department's Pesticide Management Division regulates individuals and companies that sell, use, or supervise the use of restricted pesticides, engage in the commercial application of pesticides, and structural pest control or horticultural activities. The ACRC is a non-profit organization that collects and recycles non-refillable high-density polyethylene crop protection product containers. Release of Decapitating Flies

Commissioner Ron Sparks attended the release of hundreds of phorid flies as part of the Alabama Fire Ant Management Program at the Sand Mountain Research and Extension Center in Crossville on April 29, 2005.

Imported fire ants were accidentally introduced into Alabama from South America more than sixty years ago. The phorid fly, a natural enemy of the fire ant, lays an egg into the ant's body. Once the egg hatches, the larvae eats the insides of the ant's head. Eventually the head falls off and the new fly emerges.

The flies are not able to eradicate fire ants in Alabama, but they are able to reduce the population and terrorize foraging ants.

This will allow our native ants to compete with fire ants.

"We truly appreciate the efforts of the Alabama Fire Ant Program provided by Auburn University," stated Sparks. "While we can not eradicate fire ants, we can try to make our land and homes as safe as they can possibly be."

Senator Lowell Barron also attended the release of the flies. "Fire ants have become both a nuisance and a safety concern throughout the state. I am pleased to see the efforts by Auburn University to help control the fire ant population and protect our residents and our property," stated Barron. "I also am happy that this is being done with the use of a natural predator to the fire ant; not by introducing additional, potentially dangerous, chemicals into the environment."

The Alabama Fire Ant Program is funded by the state through the Department of Agriculture and Industries. For more information, please contact Dr. Fudd Graham, Coordinator of the Alabama Fire Ant Management Program at 334/750-3994.

Buy Fresh, Buy Local Campaign

The sign that made taste buds tingle gathered a huge following its first year in the state, and producers are hoping that Alabama's "Buy Fresh, Buy Local" campaign will harvest even more fans this year, translating into more profits for farmers.

"There will be billboards across the state along with radio and print advertising," said Don Wambles, administrator of the State of Alabama Farmers Market Authority. "Our website, BuyLocalAlabama.com has been a tremendous success as well. It helps connect consumers with farmers markets and roadside stands in their area."

Farms that participate in the "Buy Fresh, Buy Local" campaign through the Alabama Farmers Market Authority range in size from an acre to several hundred acres. But they all have one thing in common - they're owned by Alabama farmers.

Brian Hardin, director of the Alabama Farmers Federation's Horticulture Division, said "Buy Fresh, Buy Local" gave the state's fruit and vegetable industry a noticeable boost last year. He believes the trend will increase this year.

Hardin said the program was so well received last year that many producers chose to incorporate the "Buy Fresh, Buy Local" logo into their own promotion plans.

Art Sessions, who operates a diversified farm in Mobile County near Grand Bay, has been growing vegetables for more than 30 years.

"Buy Fresh, Buy Local" was a great success in the Mobile area," Sessions said. "We had a lot of positive reaction from the farmers, market managers and our customers. It's just been great and we're excited about what we hope it will do for us this year."
